Sally gives Vanessa some bowling advice. What does she suggest?

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Vanessa: OK, I'm setting up this shot. Can you show me how to position myself?
Sally: I thought this was a competition!
Vanessa: Please, I don't remember how to do this.
Sally: OK, you should put your feet in the proper position. After that, your body will align itself the right way for the shot. You ought to point your feet in the direction that you want the ball to go.
Vanessa: Could you show me where to stand?
Sally: Stand right here, about two or three strides from the line. You'd better not step on the line, though. If you do, you lose your turn.
Vanessa: OK. Should I bend my knees?
Sally: Yes, keep your knees loose - don't lock them. Let me show you how to stand.
Vanessa: Ok. That seems easy enough.
Sally: We should take bowling lessons! There's a poster over there with prices. What do you think?
Vanessa: I don't know ...
Sally: Let me ask the clerk. Excuse me, can you tell me how the lessons work?
Bowling Clerk: Sure. You can take lessons once, twice or three times a week. If you want to improve fast, you ought to take the master course.

Giving Advice

You use modals to give advice.

The most common modals for giving advice are:
should, ought to and had better.

You can think of modals as “helping verbs”. They add meaning to the main verb of a sentence. In this case, these modals add the meaning of advice.

Should is the most common modal used to give advice.
Ought to and had better are used for giving strong advice.

Subject	Modal	Main Verb
You	should	put	your feet in the proper position.
You	ought to	point	your feet in the right direction.
You	had better not	step	on the line.

- In conversation, it is common to use contractions with had better.

You'd better not step on the line.

Examples:

- You ought to point your feet in the direction that you want the ball to go.
- OK, you should put your feet in the proper position.
